The Shepperd House is a wood frame four-square house constructed on a concrete wall foundation. The house measures three bays by three bays and rises 2½ stories. The house has a full-width front porch with a flattened arch opening and hip roof. There is one exterior brick chimney and one interior brick chimney. A set of wood steps has been added to the south side, rising to the second story and there is a rear hip-roof addition. The house has metal double-hung sash (3/1 lights) windows and added metal storm windows. The pyramidal roof is clad by composition shingles and the house is clad my metal siding.

This building was constructed in 1929, according to the MIHP form completed for this property in 1980. A common early twentieth century house type, the MHT believes that the property is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places ~~because it continues to exemplify the linear layout of Hereford.~~ as a representative example of vernacular domestic architecture of the period in the region.

HEREFORD

PRIVATE

This is a colonial revival house near the southern fringe of Hereford and reflects the outer limit of town growth in the early automobile era. It stands on a long but relatively narrow lot that runs through from York Road, to the former route to York, Pennsylvania, a road now renamed Hereford Road. A new house was added to the tax rolls in 1929 to replace a dwelling 12 by 18 feet, assessed at only $194 in the 1918 assessment ledger. The original owners were Leonard E. and Josephine M. Shepperd. They sold in 1968 to the present owners. The house is 2-½ storeys with a hip roof. The full-width front porch has a single flattened-out arch spanning its entire frontage. There is a center-hall floor plan. Outer covering is green aluminum siding. Foundation is poured concrete.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Blizzard or Shepperd House is a 2-1/2 story frame dwelling in Colonial Revival style. The main roof is hipped, with overhanging eaves and one dormer that faces the street. The dormer is also hip-roofed and emerges slightly below the roof peak. It contains contiguous double-hung sash windows. The house is three bays wide at first-story level, with a center door flanked by pairs of double-hung sash windows. At second story-level, there are two bays, each with a pair of contiguous sash windows. The windows here, as well as those along the sides are double-hung sash types with the more unusual layout of 3-over-1. There are no shutters.

The house probably has a center hall plan, unlike many examples of the Colonial Revival.

The front porch is hip-roofed, with a single, flattened-out arch that spans the front entrance steps and, in fact, the entire front area from one corner of the porch to the other. The ends of this porch are spanned by pointed arches. The spandrel areas of these arches are covered with aluminum siding. The porch is railed in by low walls of aluminum siding. The space under the porch is screened by panels of wooden latticework.

The north end of the house is three bays deep in the main block. The center bay contains only a side door, paneled with three horizontal glass lights, protected by a cantilevered entrance hood. There is a poured concrete entrance platform reached by three concrete steps. The four windows on the northside, two at each story, in the two bays flanking the side door, are similar to those on the main facade, 3-over-1 in layout.

The south facade is three bays deep. An outside end chimney with space for a first-story fireplace rises between the first and second bays east of the street; typical windows are found at both stories either side of the chimney. In the third bay from the street at second-story level is an entrance reached by an open wooden stairway (or fireplace).

The entire house is covered with a light green aluminum siding. A second chimney rises through the rear slope of the hip roof. The foundation is concrete, scarcely visible on the north facade, about two feet of it exposed on the south, where horizontal basement windows can be seen.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Shepperd House is a Colonial revival dwelling near the southern fringe of Hereford and reflects the outer limit of the town's growth in the early automobile era. It stood on a long but relatively narrow lot, one that reached from the present York Road, the York Turnpike, eastward to the Old York Road, now called Hereford Road. The property was unimproved in 1911, and belonged to Robert C. Maxwell. (1) By 1918, there was a dwelling of one story, 12 by 18 feet, worth $194.00 (2)

Maxwell sold a part of this acreage to Leonard E. Shepperd in 1926. (3) In the 1928-1940 tax series, Shepperd was charged with:

New
1929 House 2500 Outbuilding 75 $2575.00 (4)

The original owner and his wife, Josephine M. Shepperd sold in 1968 to James W. Blizzard. At that time, the Shepperds were residents of Ocala, Florida. (5)

The various parcels that run from York Road to Hereford Road were in 1855 leased by Baltimore inventor and agricultural implement manufacturer, Obed Hussey. Hussey is credited by the Smithsonian Institution as inventor of the reaper; he also built a successful steam tractor in 1855, but no physical evidence ties him to the vicinity of Hereford. (6)
